Institute of Objective Studies
A brief Introduction

The Institute of Objective Studies (IOS) was established in the year 1986 with the cooperation of Muslim scholars and intellectuals and formally registered under the Societies Registration Act of Govt. of India on April 13, 1987. The objectives of the Institute are:

a. To undertake objective studies relating to Islam and Indian Muslims.
b. To undertake studies on major Indian religions.
c. To study and analyse issues and problems relating to Indian Muslims in particular and the country in general.

Since its inception, the Institute of Objective Studies has been devoting to the promotion of empirical and conceptual studies in the social sciences, humanities and law in an Islamic perspective and to studies and issues concerning the Muslim ummah, the nation and the humanity as a whole.

The Institute functions in a democratic manner with its headquarters located in New Delhi and five branches at Aligarh, Chennai, Calicut, Kolkata and Patna, which are known as IOS Chapters. Researches are initiated and supervised by 23 Academic Committees in different disciplines.

The activities and programmes carried out under the aegis of the Institute have been widely recognised and appreciated in India and abroad. The various projects sponsored by the Institute have fulfilled a long felt need for reliable and authentic information and analysis on problems and issues pertaining to the Muslim community in India.

So far about 387 projects, reports and translations of important books have been completed and published by the Institute.

The Institute has brought together a number of eminent Muslim social scientists and Ulama. The cooperation extended by the Ulama has greatly benefited the Institute in carrying out its multi-faceted programmes and activities.

From time to time, the Institute organises national and international seminars and workshops on issues and problems relating to Indian Muslims, to the country and to the larger humanity. So far, the Institute has organised more than 194 seminars, workshops and meets. Most of the reports of these seminars and workshops have been published.

The Institute also organises monthly lectures on topical themes which are delivered by eminent scholars and Ulama.

As a result of meetings between the Ulama and social scientists and intellectuals, organised by the Institute many of the Ulama have agreed to include modern subjects in the curriculum of Madaris. They have invited Muslim scholars from different universities to address the students of Madaris on modern disciplines.

A serious problem in the study of Indian Muslims is the paucity of reliable and authentic data. In order to fill in this lacuna the Institute has set up a Data Bank.
The Institute celebrated the 50th year of India’s independence by organising a two-day seminar on “Muslims in India since Independence” on 28-29 March, 1998 in New Delhi. A number of programmes were also organised at its Chapters in Aligarh, Patna, Calicut, Chennai and Kolkata. These programmes highlighted the contribution of Muslims to the independence movement as well as the problems faced by the Muslim community during the past 50 years.

Shah Waliullah: An Introduction

Shah Waliullah (1703-1763) was one of the most outstanding Muslim scholars of eighteenth century India. He was a rare polymath who made highly original and seminal contributions to a variety of Islamic disciplines, including the translation and exegesis of the Qur’an, Hadith, Fiqh, historiography, Kalam, Tasawwuf and Islamic philosophy. He played a pioneering role in the revival and regeneration of the intellectual, moral and cultural legacy of Islam and thereby influenced and inspired several generations of Muslims in the Indian subcontinent.

One of the most important and enduring contributions of Shah Waliullah relates to the Holy Qur’an. Four distinctive but interrelated dimensions of his approach to the Holy Qur’an and his contributions to Qur’anic studies are noteworthy.

He emphasized the pivotal role of the Qur’an in the Islamic ethos and considered it incumbent on every Muslim to understand its meaning and message. Realising that a majority of Muslims in India were not sufficiently conversant with the Arabic language, he undertook a translation of the Qur’an into Persian. Subsequently, two of his sons rendered the Qur’an, on the basis of his Persian translation, into Urdu, the lingua franca of Muslims in large parts of the country. These translations paved the way for the translation of the Holy Qur’an into other vernacular languages.

Shah Waliullah firmly believed that religious instruction in Islamic madaris should begin with the learning of the Qur’anic text, followed by its translation and explanation of difficult words and passages as well as a brief commentary in the local language. He believed that this should form an inseparable part of the curriculum of Islamic madaris.
He realized, to his dismay, that the scholars and ulama of his time were deeply enamoured of Greek philosophy and attached undue importance to philology and grammar. He cautioned them against the insidious consequences of this preoccupation and urged them to turn instead to the fundamental sources of Islam—the Qur’an and Hadith—which alone could provide a true understanding of Islamic teachings and principles.

Shah Waliullah was acutely aware of the need to interpret and project the teachings and principles of Islam in the contemporary academic and literary idiom. He worked out, for this purpose, a comprehensive and cogent system of Islamic philosophy and scholasticism based essentially on the edifice of the Qur’an and Hadith but presented in the idiom and style of his time.

13th Shah Waliullah Award on “Islam and Political Science”

The last date for receipt of nominations is 15 January, 2018.
A Note on the Theme of the Award

Islam, in its broader sense, is guiding force that permeates to each corner of existence in all forms and stages. It believes in the principle of unity of God, unity of existence, unity of thought that strives to give immense contentment to soul in all forms. It takes man as an embodiment of spirituo-moral excellence which may be attained through faith and positive action meant to be devoted to seek the pleasure of Almighty Allah. Allah Subhanahu Taala has created man as the crown of creation and His vicegerent on earth. This makes man special and unique in His Scheme of things. Now, a pertinent question may be raised as to how this responsibility can be discharged in its true and real form. State provides necessary authority to take compelling decisions. This seems to be a point to introduce Political Science as a discipline, in the words of David Easton ‘to deal with authoritative allocation of values’, which means taking decisions backed by sovereign authority of State. Hence, Islam becomes highly relevant to deal with the institution of State and governing system. The moment this point is established a new window leading to study theory and practice of State is in full view.

Coming to political science, Robert A Dahl takes politics as a set of human interactions, which focuses on patterns of distribution of resources or values in the society. It is also an authority or power to deal with relations in it. Further, emphasis is on policy outcomes appearing in the writings of Harold Laswell, who defines politics as being concerned with ‘who gets what, when and how’. This definition looks politics in many social settings including those of governing institutions. Hence, the subject matter of political science has undergone a transformation from an emphasis on State structures to set of human behaviour and interactions concerning with allocation of scarce resources, which are considered essential for dispensing with high moral grounds and standards set by Islam to bring about equality, liberty, fraternity and social justice. Additionally, the 19th century positivists and empiricists emphasized the search for a good society concentrating on finding evolving standard norms of behavior in thought and action.

Individual and collective consciousness of Islam revolves around the Islamic prayer, saying to ‘Guide us to the straight path’. Inherent in the prayer are the principles of good life, of social solidarity and equality, of leadership and obedience, responsibility and responsiveness and of universal brotherhood. Same spirit goes in other sectors of human life in the form of training in social living. The more one follows the training, the more is harmonization of ideals and practices of Islam.

Politics is also central to Islam, if it is defined in its narrow sense, it means the art of governance. Quranic exhortations of enjoining the good and forbidding the evil of upholding justice and other divine values and criteria, require the participation of all members of society in the affairs of government towards ends laid down by Allah (SWT). Quran condemns anarchy and disorder (2:205) and the Prophet (SAAS) stressed the need for organization and authority in society. Islam upholds an organic, holistic approach to life in which religion is intimately intertwined with politics, law and society. Islam also shatters the absolutism of semi-gods and false deities, to divest them from any leadership roles; to rest power for the righteous and to reinstate good in place of evil. One of the major objectives of his hijra (migration to Madina) was to establish political authority in accordance with Divine will. Islam is thus actively concerned with power, through which the world would be transformed to be in accordance with Islamic tenents and principles to benefit humanity. Islam puts power in an active moral framework. It is not an end, but a means to serve Allah (SWT) to earn a blissful eternal life and thus a source of mercy and justice for humanity.

The foregoing explanation points to the fact that a fusion of religion and politics is dictate of Islam and cannot be disregarded in any form. In Islam, ethics sets the tone of politics and rules of political behaviour. Thus, the major concerns of politics are striving to control the State structure, to wrest power for the righteous, to root out evil and bring about a good life. In terms of historical evolution of political science, thinkers and political philosophers have contributed immensely. Three major trends in intellectual history may be identified: (a) the Mystics (Sufis), (b) Thinkers and Jurists, and (c) Ulema. These categories have contributed to the growth of political science within the framework of Islam. However, there is a notable despondence during last two centuries. Nevertheless, the torch of inquiry into political aspects has been kept in high by few quarters. It is encouraging that some quarters are taking up challenges in these areas and a viable picture may emerge on the horizon.

Islam is a well ordered system of life that deals with all aspects of human existence and performance. It is a consistent whole, comprising of universal principles and cultural values for complete guidance of humanity. Political Science provides thought and action plan based on Islamic philosophy and values.

Hence, there is dire need to understand and pursue real relationship of Islam and Politics. This would enable the unity to find appropriate ways and strategies to exist and develop.

A Note on the theme of Essay

Political System in Islam: Relevance to Modern Time

Islam, surrender to the will of Allah which brings about peace within and without, is a complete way of life. And life is both soul and body, spiritual and material. Islam, therefore, is complete code of life covering both its spiritual and material aspects.

The Prophet (PBUH) established and headed the city state of Madinah which was religiously plural. Although he was the Prophet, fully under divine guidance and protection, Muhammad, peace be upon him, always followed the Quranic injunction: wa anārokhum shura baihāmu , (they) conduct their affairs through mutual consultation. So we see the Prophet consulting his companions on all important issues, social, political and military which arose in his time. The practice of mutual consultation continued during the time of the rightly-guided Caliphs also. The democratic principle of political life in Islam, especially regarding the succession of rulers was subverted by Ameer Muawiya when he appointed his son, Yazeed as his successor. It was a bad innovation but sadly has become such a strong institutionalized tradition that it continues even today in many parts of the Muslim world.

Muslim scholars from medieval period to modern time, have been preoccupied with what may be described as the development of political theory of Islam. The early biographers of the Prophet gave equal importance to his political and military activities and decisions that he took for dealing with such issues. Later, when the Khilafah was converted into Mulkiyat, monarchy they either opposed it or explained the political system of Islam in ways they thought was appropriate in the then prevailing conditions. Mawardi, Ibn Taimiya, Ibn Khaldun and others even sought to develop a political theory of Islam.

In view of the strong emphasis on democratization of social life in Islam, democracy and its various institutions should have first developed in the world of Islam. Unfortunately the Khilafah of democratic nature and content was replaced by monarchy which has historically been the hallmark of political system and establishment in the Muslim world. It saddens that when in the modern time democracy emerged as the most prominent feature of modern civilization, Muslim scholars had to explain that Islam was neither opposed to nor incompatible with the concept of democratic governance and system.

Khilafah and Shariah emerge as key politico-legal terms when we try to explain or develop a political theory and system of Islam. Khilafah, broadly speaking, is the political system and order of Islam and Shariah is its legal system. The Quran has urged Muslims to conduct their social and political affairs through mutual consultation. The term, Khilafah has not been used in the Quran to describe the political system of Islam. But man has been described as Allah’s Khalifah, vicegerent on earth. Abu Bakr, the first Caliph chose to be called Khalifah, the Prophet’s successor in worldly matters. His immediate successor, Umar, preferred to be called Ameer al Momineen. However, the subsequent pious Caliphs were called Khalifah which thereafter became a common practice in the Muslim history. But it ought to be noted here that although a great majority of the Muslim rulers preferred to be called Khalifah like the rightly-guided Caliphs, they behaved as absolute rulers. Similarly Shariah has normally been the law of Muslim states and empires till the onset of the modern age when a large portion of the Muslim world was colonized by the European powers. Shariah is the body of laws drawn from the Quran and Sunnah as well as developed by the Muslim jurists in their light. Shariah, therefore, is partly divine and partly human.

The Board administering the Shah Waliullah Award has decided that the prestigious prize for the thirteen Shah Waliullah Award will be conferred on a person/ scholar who has made outstanding contribution in the field of Political Science from an Islamic perspective. As per our tradition the Board also invites young scholars to participate in the essay competition through well written scholarly articles on “Political System in Islam: Relevance to Modern Time”.
