Kocatepe Camii (Mosque) – Ankara, Turkey, 1987

Idea of building the Kocatepe Mosque dates back to the 1940s. In 1956, through the efforts of the late Adnan Menderes, Prime Minister of the time, land was allocated for the project to build a mosque in Ankara, and a request for project was made once again in 1957. The accepted project was an innovative and modern design. This mosque, which can accommodate 24,000 worshippers, is one of the largest mosques of the world, and accepted by many as the frontiers of modern Islamic architecture. After a third architectural competition in 1967, a more conservative or nostalgic design by Hüseyin Tayla and M. Fatih Uluergün was chosen to be built. Completed in 1987, this project is built in a neo-classical Ottoman architectural style, and is an eclectic building inspired by the Selimiye mosque in Edirne, and the Şehzade and Sultan Ahmet mosques in Istanbul.
